

The Inter-Generational Cycle of Offending and the Impact on the Family

My name is Bronagh Malcomson.

I am currently on a Research Travelling Fellowship, awarded by the Winston Churchill Memorial Trust.

This summer I am visiting strategic organisations based in Europe who are involved in innovative practices that support families and children who are affected by imprisonment.

The aim of my research is to;

- Obtain examples of best practice applicable to the UK.
- Gain new knowledge and skills which will be used to develop new learning, tools and resources for the Parenting Matters programme I currently deliver.
- Disseminate this learning and resources more widely through Barnardo's UK under the 'Children Affected by Parental Imprisonment' work stream.
- Enhance the skills of prison staff involved in co-delivering such programmes through the transfer of knowledge, resources and best practice gained from the project.
- Strengthen family relationships between those imprisoned and their families to improve wellbeing, reduce offending and break the intergenerational cycle of offending and disadvantage.

Are you doing great work with families and children affected by imprisonment? Would you like to share your experiences?

Come talk to me today or get in touch via email: bronagh5@yahoo.co.uk
